The Protection of Personal Information Act (POPIA) is a key piece of legislation that protects and upholds our right to privacy. Fundamentally, the Act aims to protect people's personal information. It therefore protects your personal information, but it also provides specific guidelines on how you must process other people's personal information in your day-to-day work.

This course explains exactly what you need to do to comply with POPIA in the workplace. It covers the following topics:

- The POPIA context.
- You as a responsible party.
- The eight conditions for the lawful processing of personal information.
- Marketing and POPIA.
- Managing risks and enforcement.

This course is aimed at everyone in the workplace who has access to the personal information of others.
